ENERGY TALKS

By Warren B. Davis
Director, Energy Economics
Gulf Oil Corporation

"What steps can the average consumer take to help alleviate the U.S. energy crisis?"

"Well, he can cut down on his fuel consumption, but this is only a small part of it. For instance, he could turn off the lights when he's not using them and he can avoid unnecessary trips in his automobile. But the more important thing for him to do is to let his legislator know that he wants laws that will foster the development and use of U.S. resources. This is the more important thing."

• Mr. Davis was principal author of the National Petroleum Council's "U.S. Energy Outlook" prepared for the U.S. Interior Department.

Ten Ways To Reduce Risk Of Fire

Six thousand, five hundred and fifty Americans were killed in burning homes in one year recently, according to the National Fire Protection Association. If more people followed a few easy precautions, many of these tragic deaths might have been avoided.

Matches and lighters should be kept out of the reach of children. Lots of large, noncombustible ashtrays should be left in every room, and all cigarettes, etc., must be put out in them, not left to smoulder. People should beware of smoking in bed or when tired.

The ceilings and walls near a furnace ought to be checked. If they're hot, an increase in insulation could keep them from charring and a fire from starting.

The manufacturer's directions for all kerosene or fuel stoves must be followed very carefully. The fuel should be stored outside and away from children and any spills wiped up at once.

Fuses should fit the circuits they're used for. Most homes require 15 amperes for lights. A blown fuse most likely means an overloaded circuit, and if it fails frequently, it might be due to a defective circuit, and that could lead to catastrophe.

People should prevent pot handles from sticking out over the edge of a stove where children might reach for them and people passing could tip them over.

Paint can be a fire hazard. A room that's being painted should be kept well ventilated, and paint-soaked rags and brushes should never be left in a pile. They could burst into flame spontaneously.

Televisions, large radios and other big pieces of electrical equipment should be kept away from radiators and fireplaces. These items give off a lot of best, and if the room is not properly ventilated, could cause a fire.

Children should be forbidden to play near a barbecue, fireplace or open fire, or to put or throw anything into a fire.

Even though a new law requires all children's night clothes up to size 6X to be flame resistant, washing them in soap or many non-phosphate detergents reduces the fabric's non-flammable characteristic, and phosphate detergents are illegal in many areas because of the ecology issue. Fortunately, washing in Dynamo helps children's clothing retain their flame resistant qualities.

Children ought to be cautioned to keep clear of electrical outlets, wires and electrical appliances, as their curiosity can kill more than the cat.

These simple safety measures might help to save lives and keep those home fires from burning.

Appomattox Native Is Featured In Roanoke Newspaper Article

Mrs. Mary McGee, a native of Appomattox County, was featured in an article, "Drive Slowly - Dog Country," in the December 1, 1973 edition of the ROANOKE TIMES. The story about Mrs. McGee follows.

She is the sister of Mrs. Curtis Mitchell, Mrs. J. J. Wingfield and Mr. Alfred Jones of Appomattox.

By Trudy Willis
Roanoke Times Staff Writer

TROUTVILLE — Although the sign on the driveway at MacBeth Kennels in Troutville says "Drive slowly—This is dog country," the establishment is more like a three ring circus.

Specializing in "high class" animals, none of which sell for less than $50, Mrs. Mary McGee and her daughter, Elizabeth Ann, can't afford to have an accident int he parking lot where some 100 odd animals are exercised without leashes daily.

The fenced-in backyard at the kennel sports baby crib like cages with floors. When a visitor drives in, a $3,000 white poodle with a green bow holding up her top knot bounds up and in one cage as if she's on a trampoline.

A rare black Pomeranian which is turning blue takes the

A Miniature Schnauzer named "Burt Reynolds" because of his physique just stands and stares at the "Hula Girl" in sheer amazement. The rest of the kennel menagerie—Afghan hounds, Cocker Spaniels, Shih Tzus, Yorkshire terriers, dachshunds, and Chihuahuas—bark out a chorus of "Welcome, come look us over" from their renovated garage quarters and from open runs that back on the farm.

All the animals the McGees sell are blue-blooded, either champions themselves, almost champions or capable of breeding champions.

For three years the McGees have been buying and planning their "bloodline program" and, with the purchase of six new champion studs this year, they have reached their goal.

Despite the value of their pets, "there's not one dog here you couldn't pick up and love with the exception of Doberman Pinscher which deserves respect," says Mrs. McGee. "We want to breed lovers, not mean, feisty animals."

They sell their animals all over Virginia but rarely find they need to advertise. Most of their customers find out about them by word of mouth. Besides, the McGees give off the impression they couldn't care less if anyone comes to buy their animals since they love them so much.

An Appomattox native, Mrs. McGee says she's always "loved anything that moved" and has never been without a dog all her life. "I got skinned many a time for letting my dogs in the house when I was little."

She intended to go into the antique business when she married a contractor who's still traveling all over the country, coming home only on weekends. When she called it quits on traveling and settled in the cottage in Troutville four years ago, she sold her collection of 250 mustache cups and shaving mugs to get her start in the kennel business.

She packed her son off to college soon after she settled in. Virginia Tech had the dubious honor of being honor of being the 17th school she had enrolled the boy in. Elizabeth Ann, who turned 18 this year, is a freshman at Roanoke College and is living at home.

Elizabeth Ann says the animals consider her "mommy when my mother isn't around" and so can't foresee the day when she'll leave home to get a regular job.

Her mother let her individual membership in the American Kennel Club (AKC) expire when Elizabeth Ann bought her first Afghan hound and she enrolled her daughter in her place.

Mrs. McGee resigned herself to being the "cleaner-up-er" while she let Elizabeth Ann learn how to show the animals. They have accumulated approximately 200 ribbons in shows since 1969, not counting the ribbons the animals already had when they bought them.

Estimating that caring for the dogs takes at least 16 hours a day, Mrs. McGee asserts that she has not slept a full night in the last three years.

"How can you sleep when a dog's having puppies," she queried. Part of the blame though is due to her compulsion to get up and check the dogs everytime they bark.

"They usually have a reason for barking - either a cat has jumped the fence and is eating out of their bowls or some other animal has invaded their territory." She has close neighbors on either side but they have never complained about the dogs barking, she says. "We don't want to bother anybody."

As if her menagerie of dogs isn't enough, Mrs. McGee's 13 acre "piece of heaven" in Troutville also includes cows, pigs, chickens and a mighty black bull named "Mr. Universe." All the outbuildings on the farm, which she said was badly run-down when she bought it, have been pressed into service as kennel space and runs. And she did most of the work herself.

The work doesn't bother her though. She is doing what she loves and "I've promised myself I'll take a whole year off...when I reach 82.

cue and follows suit, only his cage is taller so he jumps higher. A miniature toy poodle waits for the visitor to get to the fence before she starts dancing the hula on two paws and bares her teeth in a simulated "welcome" grin.

Joint Release From Colleges & Universities

RICHMOND–The governing boards of Virginia's public colleges and universities and the state Council of Higher Education convened here Wednesday, November 28, for a hard look at the problems and opportunities of higher education in the 1970's.

Some 200 members of the public institutions' Boards of Visitors, the State Community College Board, the State Council, and other representatives of the state's schools will meet jointly at the Larrick Student Center on the Medical College of Virginia Campus of Virginia Commonwealth University.

The conference, initiated two years ago as the Commonwealth Conference on Higher Education, is sponsored jointly by the public colleges and universities in conjunction with the State Council, the state-wide coordinating agency.

VCU President Warren W. Brandt, host president for the conference, described the joint meeting as "an opportunity for the business, professional, and community leaders who serve on the governing boards to examine realistically the challenges the institutions face in the 1970's."

Governor Linwood Holton is scheduled to address the conference Wednesday afternoon. Ralph K. Huitt, executive director of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, will be the lead off speaker at 10:15 a.m. Wednesday. The morning session of the day-long conference also will include a panel discussion, "Virginia Higher Education in the 1970's." Panelists will include Daniel C. Lewis of West Point, chairman of the Community College Board; University of Virginia President Edgar F. Shannon, Jr.; Daniel E. Marvin, Jr., State Council director; and Elias Blake, Jr. of the George Mason University Board.

Other program participants are Presidents Ronald E. Carrier of Madison College and T. Marshall Hahn, Jr. of Virginia Tech, along with Dr. Wyndham B. Blanton, Jr., Rector of the VCU Board, and Earl J. Shiflet, Governor Holton's Cabinet representative for education.
